Background information :

Close to 25 years after the concept of EU citizenship was first enshrined in the EU Maastricht Treaty it is time for a thorough assessment of the key achievements and the pending challenges. Now is the time to analyse where more work remains to be done in order that citizens can fully reap the rights and privileges that come with their citizenship to the EU. In the last Citizenship Report issued in 2013 the European Commission put forward 12 concrete actions in six key areas to remove obstacles standing in the way of citizens' enjoyment of their EU rights: removing obstacles for workers, students and trainees in the EU; cutting red tape; protecting the more vulnerable, eliminating barriers to shopping; improving citizens' awareness of their EU rights, and enhancing the participation of EU citizens in the EU democratic life.

Nowadays a wide majority of Europeans are familiar with the concept of EU citizenship<sup>1</sup>, but little over half of them know what it actually means. Meanwhile, only 2 in 5 feel informed about the rights that come with EU citizenship and about the instruments available to enforce them in the case that these rights are not respected. On the other hand, free movement of people (and goods and services) across the EU remains one of the top benefits of EU citizenship perceived by citizens, as over three-quarters of Europeans express strong support for maintaining it at all costs in spite of the increasing issues of concern related to migration and the terrorist threat<sup>2</sup>.

Yet there still remain substantial obstacles and challenges for mobile EU citizens<sup>3</sup> related either to lengthy or unclear administrative procedures, or to a lack of sufficient information about their rights as EU citizens at national level.

These findings clearly show that there has been improvement in Europeans' familiarity with their status as EU citizens. However, there are still important shortcomings to be addressed concerning the level of knowledge of the rights associated to EU citizenship as well as their actual enforcement at national level.
